Concept Note

In 2005, the ICMR (Indian Council of Medical Research) had framed guidelines for ARTs (Assisted Reproductive Technologies) Clinics. However, there is no legal mechanism to enforce them or monitor compliance by clinics. The ART Bill was first drafted in 2010 by the previous UPA government. The draft prepared in the year 2012 has banned only those foreigners from hiring Indian surrogates whose own countries of origin didn't recognise commercial surrogacy as Indian practices. The Law Commission of India submitted the 228th report on Assisted Reproductive Technology procedures discussing the importance and need for surrogacy, and also the steps taken to control surrogacy arrangements. The Supreme Court of India in the 2008 Manji case held that commercial surrogacy was permissible in India. This was the genesis of the Assisted Reproductive Technology (Regulation) Bill, 2014.

The present need is that law to be made which must maintain the balance between the conflicting interests of surrogate mother and biological parents. It would not be easy to take away the child from mother who has suffered the pain to keep a child in womb, if a contract is enforced against her. There are various other negative social aspects of hiring a womb. At present, it is popular among childless couples but it is possible that the women may start hiring a womb even if they are physically capable of procreation of child. The reason behind may be their strong financial status, to avoid any hardships of pregnancy or in order to achieve their career. So, all these aspects are yet to be considered by conducting a research.

The recent proposed draft Surrogacy Regulation Bill 2016, passed by the Health Ministry, was cleared by the Union Cabinet on the 24th of August 2016; and is set to be introduced in the Parliament soon. The Bill will regulate surrogacy in India by establishing National Surrogacy Board at the Central level and State Surrogacy Boards and Appropriate Authorities in the State and Union Territories. The legislation will ensure effective regulation of surrogacy, prohibit commercial surrogacy and allow ethical surrogacy to the needy infertile couples. This National seminar will focus on the specific area and aims to bring together thoughts of academicians, health professionals, legal professionals, experts in the field as well as students.
