MOOT PROPOSITION

“I am what I am, so take me as I am”

Can we escape from our own individuality? Denial of self-expression is as good as inviting death. One defines oneself!

Cairoli is a Country whose social, legal, cultural, economic conditions and systems are similar to that of India. It recognizes the Right to life, liberty & freedom as its fundamental rights.

Vicky is a 21st-century girl and is currently employed. While in college she was a very dominating person and has manly demeanor. She was always alone and isolated from the other classmates as her interests are different and her friends thought she did not belong with them. They always mocked at her for her manly attributes and made her the subject of jokes and mimicry.

After college, she had applied for a job & fared exceptionally well in the interview. She was offered a handsome package & respectable position in the company based on her capability. Everything was a "dream come true scenario". With high hopes, she joined the office & it was the perfect place for her to be at.

The first 6 months went by smooth & she delivered more than expected from her job role. Slowly, she starting opening up & getting close to her colleagues. Now, they were going out to office parties, etc. together. She confessed to one of her close colleagues that she had a different sexual orientation and she was interested in females, not males.

This news got spread into the office like wildfire. Everyone started looking at her differently. She was getting all kinds of weird stares and comments. Now, she was being cornered and targeted by everyone including her colleagues and the manager.

She got depressed. She started missing from office on some pretext or the other for the fear of facing the constant discrimination she was going through at work. She was unable to focus at work & this affected her productivity badly. Eventually, she lost her job.

Finally, after going through all the social & emotional abuse, alienation & discrimination, Vicky decided to knock the doors of the court for justice for her kind of people.

Examine the above case in light of the following questions:

1. The natural identity of an individual should be treated to be essential to his being.

2. Correlation between Sexual orientation & Gender identity. How is this natural corollary protected under Article 21 of the Constitution?
3. Emphasize the need for an individual's freedom to conduct his sex life and personal relationships as he wishes. Are any attempts to interfere with this an attempt to violate their Right to Privacy?
4. Sexual orientation and privacy lie at the core of the fundamental rights which are guaranteed under Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution. Discuss.
5. How does the concept of Discrimination on the grounds of “sex” under Articles 15 & 16 includes discrimination on the ground of gender identity?
6. Gender identity conforms and connects with Human Rights and the constitutionally guaranteed rights. Elaborate

The apex court admitted the said Writ Petition and the matter is now posted for final arguments.
