INTRODUCTION

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is transforming the way knowledge is created, shared, and applied across professions, including the legal domain. From legal research and drafting to judicial processes and legal education, AI-powered technologies are reshaping how legal professionals, researchers, and educators engage with law.

While AI offers significant benefits through enhanced research, innovative teaching methods, and improved academic efficiency, it also raises concerns relating to academic integrity, intellectual property, data privacy, transparency, accountability, and professional ethics.

In this context, the Faculty Development Programme on “Artificial Intelligence and the Future of Legal Education: Pedagogy, Research, Ethics and Governance” aims to facilitate informed discussions on the role of AI in legal academia, promote its responsible adoption, and strengthen the capacity of legal educators to navigate an increasingly AI-driven future.

- Engages participants in critical discussions on emerging AI regulatory frameworks, governance mechanisms, intellectual property concerns, data protection issues, and the broader impact of AI on the legal profession and justice delivery systems.
